

The sushi restaurant where Alex and José had lunch.

SUSHI FOR LUNCH

November 21, 2012

José Cruz: Oh God! I'm full. How about you?

Alex Bodnar: I'm just right. I could eat more, but uh I think it's just the right amount for me. I don't like being stuffed.

José: I'm sorry that um I was surprised myself even with the price of the place that we were at. Um it's been like what six, seven years since I've been to this place. All I remember was this fantastic sushi, but um, six seven years I guess changes the price of things a lot. Either that or you know what it is, the place just got really popular.

Alex: Oh I think so I think so. It was probably undervalued ah or or perhaps the price of fish has gone up too, you know.

José: That's another thing the price of fish may have gone up, especially if like if that's a really a-h-h that's a sushi chef with a lot of pride and a lot of high end thinking he thinks like oh I got to get the better fish that's not irradiated from Fukushima or whatever he'll have to pay a lot more money for it, right?

Alex: Yeah yeah that's the whole package the uhh ambience, the environment, the atmosphere. Uh, there's I think uh more of those hyaku en uh kaiten sushi restaurants out these days too.

José: And and they're easy to get to. They're always there. Nice place to like you know get a full stomach and stuff, but like coming out to a place like this it's a it's a treat like you said it's not just the the food that's in your belly it's everything else around it. But it was worth it, don't you think?

Alex: Oh exactly. I think so.

POINTERS

'Hyaku En' is Japanese for 100 Yen

"Kaiten Sushi" restaurants serve using conveyor belts that deliver food from the kitchen directly to the customer's table

Discussion:

Have you ever eaten sushi? How often do you go to eat it?

What's your favourite food?

Why do you think some people don't like sushi?

Does your country have a famous food that some people don't like?
