UNIVERSITY CULTURES

October 23, 2017

José Cruz: And what do you want to do after you finally graduate? What's what's (Mm) your next goal?

Vasco Ferraro: Mm, that is like something I'm going to find out in- next year I reckon because this is my third year (Mm hm) so I go back to Oxford, spend another year there doing what I used to do. Because now I don't do computer science here, I just do Japanese. (Mm hmm) So I go back to Oxford, keep studying for one year, and then I should be done with uni. And I'm- I'm still not quite sure what to do next. I mean I- not like you know the Japanese um, idea of haf- having to job hunt hard. (Right right) It's like I- I don't really understand it I just want that much (It's OK) I need to leave, and to...

José: Most Japanese don't understand (get by) why they have to do that themselves, don't worry.

Vasco: Mm they just do it.

José: It's part of this thing they do, "OK well whatever, it's- my brother did it."

Vasco: It's part of their culture, and (Yeah) I don't understand it myself, but I don't- don't share that same spirit of- I won't call it hard working. (Ha ha) Once I start working I- I'll be a hard worker, as I was.

José: But the the- Do Italian university graduates go through um, a- a system of job hunting or post gra- not post graduate studies but post graduation lifestyle more similar to the Japanese or more similar to the Western style where (I think) basically you're on your own, whereas here, (Mm mm) you're taken care of until they can say, "well you got a job, now you're on your own".

Vasco: I think Italy is either it's own case or it goes with the Western style.

José: I would have thought so.

Vasco: But I wouldn't put it in the same bunch as England. Because the way I felt at uni in England is exactly what you were saying now. Like they take your hand and take you there (Really?) Like yeah. Like the Japanese uni. So like I've- I've done like uni in Italy for like a month or so and then I I just- I just left- left it. And like it was madness. You just- you know there is a lesson. Where, you don't know in which room it is. You go to the room there is no professor. (Yeah) If there is a professor there is no (Sure) book, I don't know. There is like so- (Sounds like Canada) It's such a mess.

José: But maybe worse. Ha ha. I don't know.

Vasco: Probably probably, yeah. Like that is the south of Italy. So it's like the poorest part of Italy as well. (Ahh) So, Vasco uses the filler word, "LIKE" well to help him maintain his speaking speed.

want to: pronounced, "WANNA" (0:00)

going to: pronounced, "GUHNA" (0:06)

Discussion:

What is the relationship between education and a happy life?

Is graduating university necessary to a good job?

What are the good and bad points of your own education?

it's not quite- I haven't been to Rome for studying for instance so that might be on another level but still, Italy is uh, on on these things Italy is not that good as England or um, yeah see, I don't about you say but, I reckon it's a different case.
